Pall Mail Gazatte. The famous conjurer Hermann has arrived in Paris from Vienna, after a sojourn of six months in South Amerca. During a performance at the house of the Governor of Montevidoe, Herman determined to mystify three half-savage Patagonians who were present, and whom no one dared to approach. He stapified the first by taking an orange from his nose, he astonished the second by producing a series of piasters from his hair, but the third seemed over-powered with terror as he extracted from his nose a living rat. Uttering a cry of fright, the Patagonians withdrew, and the company congratulated Hermann upon his success. While receiving their congratulations he suddenly discovered that his watch was gone, and that his chain had gene with it. His purse, too, had disappeared, and the thief had also appropriated his eyeglasses and his pocket hankerchief. Half an bour thement; his pocket hankerchief. Half an hour afterward the chief of the Patagonians returned, bringing the missing articles.
